COMPLAINT has been made to the mounted police of the conduct of some small boys in town. While the police do not feel bound to act on informal information it is well for everyone to understand that if a formal information is laid they are here for business, and that what may seem altogether too funny for anything before they act will probably wear an entirely different appearance to the principal parties concerned after action has been taken by them.

IN a letter to the Free Press advocating a renewal of efforts to settle up the vacant lands of the Red River valley in Manitoba. Edward Richard, at one time sheriff of the Northwest, besides making many valuable suggestions has the following very sensible remark: I know that some may raise the objection that, in speaking of our locality others should not be mentioned in a way to show superior advantages over them. This objection should have no weight, if my statements are true, or if we believe them to be so. In the end truth will do the most good to all. It stands to reason that a country 1,000 miles long by 500 broad cannot be all the same. What those differences are should be enquired into and told for the general interest. If the immigrant public had been told that the country in the Estevan district, near the boundary, was inferior to the Dauphin, the Carrot river, the Edmonton, the Battle river, there would not have been the disappointment that we see to-day in that section. If the Germans, who settled in the neighborhood of Medicine Hat, had been told these differences, they would not have had to leave the country or pull up stakes to go towards Edmonton after a useless battle and expense against nature. Not only is it right to let these differences be known, but at the same time it is proper and a duty to direct the farming operations in the right direction.

EDMONTON BULLETIN, OCTOBER 2ND, 1893.

W. F. LUXTON—FREE PRESS.

The retirement of W. F. Luxton, from the management of the Manitoba Free Press is an event of historical importance to this western country, not only on account of the vast influence that he through his paper has exercised upon its affairs but also on account of the circumstances attending, or rather causing, his retirement. For over twenty years the Free Press has been the leading newspaper of the Canadian West and has kept itself more closely in touch with the thoughts and feelings, the hopes and wishes, of the people in every part of this great country than any other institution of any kind. Through the medium of the Free Press Mr. Luxton has been the counsellor and friend of the most remote or isolated settler as well as of the men who had the guidance of the country's destinies in their hands. And to Mr. Luxton's everlasting credit be it said that although the most powerful politician might have cause to hate or dread him or his paper, no honest settler or other person was so remote or so isolated or so friendless that the columns of the Free Press were not open to a statement of his case or available for the redress of his grievances. Above everything else Mr. Luxton was an earnest man. As he states himself and as everyone knows, the ambition of his life was to build up a great newspaper that would be a benefit and a credit to the country in and for which it was published. That he was successful in this to the very highest degree, up to the very moment of his retirement, everyone knows; but no one can know the full measure of benefit that the publication of such a paper conducted on such lines has been to the people and to the country. By gathering the news of this vast region and presenting it day after day and week after week to the residents of the region itself and of the world Mr. Luxton made the people of the west acquainted with each other and with the vastness and greatness of their country, thereby infusing them with a common interest and a common pride and ambition, the value of which cannot be estimated; and at the same time kept the country and its greatness more prominently before the rest of the world than was possible by any other agency than a great newspaper ably conducted, as was the Free Press. Not only was the news of the Canadian west most fully chronicled in the columns under his control but those residents of the west who had access to his paper—and it is no exaggeration to say that everyone who could read read the Free Press—had from day to day the fullest possible information as to what was going on in the world about them so that their attention was attracted, their views enlarged, and life thereby made more pleasant for them to a degree that cannot be measured in money value.

It may be said: What difference does the retirement of Mr. Luxton from the Free Press necessarily make to the readers of the paper or to the country at large. The paper is universally read, its business is established, its proprietors have plenty of money to hire another editor with perhaps greater abilities than those possessed by Mr. Luxton. Mr. Luxton had no capital invested in the paper, he was only one part of a vast and complex machine, and having become worn out or unsuited to the purposes of the proprietors has been cast aside to make room for a newer or more suitable piece. No doubt it was reasoning such as this on the part of the proprietors that led to his services being dispensed with. But the reasoning is faulty. Mr. Luxton was not a part of the engine he was the engineer. He was more: he was the designer and builder of the engine which he controlled. The engine was of such a complex nature and performed such complex duties that he only of all the many who attempted—most of them under apparently more favorable circumstances—to build such an engine in Winnipeg for the Northwest failed utterly. The energy, the insight, the foresight, the high ambition, the honesty of purpose that commanded respect and support that were lacking in others and were present in him cannot be bought for money. The vast inherent difference between the hireling and the owner was pointed out by an infallible teacher nearly 2,000 years ago, and the proprietors of the Free Press and its readers as well will find that the rule is as infallible and the difference as great now as then. The Free Press was a part of Mr. Luxton's personality and as such in fighting the battles of the settler and the country, and (whatever mistakes he may have made or whatever errors he may have committed) he did fight hard and long and well for those rights, what he said and did and even what he thought became of deepest interest to every man in the country whether agreeing with or opposing his views. The Free Press without the personality of he who made it is the body without the soul and will be regarded as such by everyone. Under such circumstances it can never have that power to influence men's minds that it has hitherto possessed.

But important though the retirement of Mr. Luxton from the Free Press is, the why and wherefore of that retirement is still more important. Mr. Luxton was retired because circumstances had placed him financially at the mercy of certain powerful corporations, and because his sense of right would not permit him—even at the sacrifice of himself—to use his paper for their purposes to the extent demanded by them. Knowing as everyone knows that the Free Press, at least until recent years, was the most ardent champion of popular rights, and knowing that in recent years its championship of those rights was not as earnest as formerly, which lack of earnestness may fairly be credited to the influence that gave the final stroke a few days ago, we are bound to believe that the retirement of Mr. Luxton from the Free Press was not because he was not willing to be passive on certain burning questions, so much as because he would not take part in some carefully planned attack upon popular rights to be made shortly by those interests which have removed him as a stumbling block from their path. Having felt the power which he had wielded in the past, having been able through his financial straits to reduce him to partial submission to their will, they demanded the final sacrifice from him: either that he should become their mere tool or give place to some one who would. It has been made perfectly plain by the case of Mr. Luxton that those who wish to trespass upon the public right for their private ends believe that the control of a newspaper is of advantage to them. Those who now control the Free Press hold mortgages on the property for double or treble the actual worth of the plant. They are men who do not give something for nothing, and when they lent money on such security it was with a view of getting a return by being at sometime able to use the paper as an instrument of aggression against the very people and interests whom it principally existed to defend. If then a paper is worth hundreds of thousands to the monopolist to be used for his purposes it is surely worth the dollar or two a year which it asks from the subscriber whose interests it is published to serve; and small and paltry though the subscription price may appear in comparison with the wealth invested in the plant and stock of a paper such as the Free Press, these little amounts were what gave it its pewer and made it worth the vast sum which has been invested in it.

This case is plain evidence that if a paper is to be able to advocate the views of its proprietor it must be kept under the financial control of that proprietor, and it is also plain that if the people, or any section of them, believe that any certain paper is advocating their interests it is for their own direct advantage to extend a liberal financial support to it so that it may continue to be able to act in those interests; otherwise, as in the case of the Free Press, no matter how strongly the proprietor may continue in the cause of which he approves, it is possible, or indeed certain, either that he will ultimately be forced from it or that the paper will pass into other hands.

The deposition of Mr. Luxton and the enlistment of his great paper in the cause of monopoly is a blow at the progress and prosperity of this country, the effect of which can only be lessened by being actively resented. It is simply a declaration of war on the part of the syndicate of monopolies who have been expressly given, or who think they have acquired, the right to fatten upon the growth of this greater Canada West, and must be accepted as such by every man who looks the matter squarely in the face. No matter how smoothly they may talk, and no doubt they talked smoothly enough to Mr. Luxton until they had him in their power, their actions are anything but smooth and it is by their actions they must be judged.

P. E. ISLAND DELEGATES.

A party of farmer delegates from Prince Edward Island arrived on Thursday's train in a special tourist car. The party is conducted by J. H. Haslam, special agent of the C. P. R. The names are: Alex. Horne, Chas. Holman, A. S. Johnstone, Theo. J. McLeod, Cyrus Morris, Duncan McKinlay, A. H. Howatt, W. H. Enman, Calvin Howatt, G. W. Cameron, Dr. Darrach, Donald Buchanan and James Johnston, Mrs. J. Wise accompanied the party as far as Regina on a visit to relatives there and Miss Haywood accompanied them to Edmonton on her way to the coast for the winter. The party stopped off at Brandon, Indian Head and Maple Creek before reaching Edmonton. They drove around the Indian Head district extensively and were delighted with the heavy yields of wheat, some fields being good for 40 bushels per acre. At Maple creek they visited several ranches and saw some very fine cattle. On reaching Edmonton they drove to St. Albert and Sturgeon river, in which latter settlement is a considerable colony of Islanders. Duncan McKinlay is a brother of Malcolm and Daniel McKinlay of that settlement. The members of the party are well suited with the district and its products, and confidently recommend it as a suitable field for settlement. They leave for home on to-morrow's train.

Calgary Tribune: While we in Calgary propose to adopt the ward system in our civic government, the city of St. John—a city of over 40,000 population,—has voted to give it up. Says an exchange:—"St. John, N. B., has voted to abolish the ward system of representation in its council, and will henceforth elect the aldermen by a vote of the whole city. The St. John idea appears to be that it takes a bigger man to spread over a whole city than over a ward, and that it needs bigger men to look after its civic affairs."

GENERAL NEWS.

A hospital at Golden, B. C., is projected.

Four inches of snow fell throughout the northern counties of England on September 23rd.

Men belonging to the British army reserve cannot be compelled to pay a debt under $150.

The Allan family hold $4,384,100 shares in the Manitoba Northwestern railway. The total shares are $5,823,150.

The right of way on the Revelstoke and Arrow lake branch of the C. P. R. has been cleared and grading will begin at once.

A new leper hospital is to be built at Tracadie, New Brunswick by the Dominion goverument to cost $15,000.

The importation of dried fruit from Smyrna, Syria, into Canada, is prohibited on account of the existence of cholera there.

The Great Northern owns the town site of South Portal on the Dakota side of the boundary on the "Soo" line of the C. P. R.

Charlebois, of the Great Northwest Central railway, told the Free Press that the road would shortly be sold by auction to the highest bidder.

Tribune, Winnipeg: Only about 25 per cent of the grain being received at the elevators throughout the province is being marketed, the majority of the farmers preferring to store and wait for higher price.

The Macleod Gazette mentions the cold snap which set in on September 16th with rain which afterwards turned to snow. On Monday night September 18th there was a blustering snow storm from the north and two inches of snow fell.

The first train to run over the "Soo" line from New Whatcom to St. Paul via the C.P. R., from Mission, B. C., to Moose Jaw, Assiniboia, left the coast on Monday, September 25th. The trains are solid all the way between St. Paul and the coast.

Calgary Tribune: While engaged in heavy lifting on his farm, at Swan Lake, Thomas Fiddler burst a blood vessel, and after three days of suffering was discovered by a neighbor and taken to a comfortable place where he could be cared for, but notwithstanding every attention from kind friends, he expired the following Sunday morning.

Speaking of the visit of Hon. Mr. Ives to Macleod the Gazette of that place says: "While we have not one word to say against Mr. White's management of the police force, we wish to point out that what the force has felt the need of is a man at its head, who has the influence and authority of a minister, and who will not, any further than is necessary, delegate the active management of the corps to anyone else. We believe that Mr. Ives is just this man, and that he will be the head of the force in reality as well as in name." The Gazette goes on to allude to the slight put upon the police by the refusal to grant medals and scrip on account of services rendered in 1885, and suggests that Mr. Ives take the matter up.

A correspondent of the Calgary Tribune writing on local freight rates says: "If the northern country is shut out from shipping to eastern markets, the more reason for giving it living rates on all local traffic and on the C. P. R. to and through British Columbia. What points north, between Calgary and Edmonton, need are reasonable local rates to begin with. They need such rates on carloads of coal, cattle, grain (especially oats), roots and vegetables as will enable them to market them in Calgary if necessary and supply the wants of local consumption. Large quantities of Edmonton coal, for instance, can be sold along the line with reasonable freight charges. Then they require reasonable rates on nearly the same class of products for shipment to points in the mountains and at the coast, right down to Victoria, and in the mining country. There can be no doubt of a large market in British Columbia for the surplus products of Alberta (much of which trade would be handled from Calgary), and it is of the excessive charges over the mountain division that the Edmonton people complain bitterly, since it costs, they say, as much to deliver stuff at the coast as it does at Port Arthur, which is more than double the distance. The rates are practically prohibitory.

A Free Press telegram of September 28th says: "Port Arthur's electric railway is now completed. It connects the three towns, Port Arthur, Fort William and West Fort William, and is eight miles in length. Through trains commence running to-morrow from the C.P.R. station, Port Arthur, to the C.P.R. station at West Fort William, and an hourly service is to be inaugurated between the three towns. The building of this railway is an interesting experiment in municipal enterprise. It was built, is owned and will be operated by the town of Port Arthur, Port William having the right to buy one-half at any time within five years. It is expected that connecting the three towns this way will be a formidable factor in uniting, consolidating and building upon the shores of Thunder Bay and the banks of the Kaministiquia one united city, which will undoubtedly be the metropolis of Algoma, the Canadian Duluth and Superior—the Chicago of Canada's Northwest." What Port Arthur has done Edmonton can do.

Calgary Herald: Freight rates between Calgary and Edmonton are under process of reconstruction, and will be considerably reduced, it is expected, by the new tariff when issued.

An irrigation ditch is being surveyed on the Blackfoot reserve.

THE BULLETIN is read more generally throughout the Edmonton district than any other paper.

If you want to do business in the Edmonton district you can reach more of the people with a less expenditure of money through the advertising columns of the BULLETIN than by any other means.

Fair advertising rates charged, and like rates to all parties.

A newspaper is not a producing industry, but if properly conducted it assists and stimulates production and progress more than any other single agency of like cost. Money spent towards the support of a newspaper is almost entirely spent within the town in which the paper is published and is therefore not lost to the business of the town.

The local newspaper represents the district in which it is published to the outside world.

Support your home paper liberally if it deserves support, so that it can give the best possible impression of your town and district as a field for immigration and investment.

There is big money for a new town in having a live and interesting paper.
